The most laughable thing about Whittle's predicament is that he probably wouldn't even have got a custodial sentence here, had not Sheppard talked him into a ludicrous plan to claim political asylum in the US. We note that 'Teflon Kev' Watmough has still had no real police interest in the neo-Nazi sites he runs, including 'Redwatch' and the 'Combat 18 Guestbook' (on which Gilleard regularly posted.)

While Gilleard, now bizarrely claiming to be a Muslim, languishes in the British high security estate, and Sheppard and Whittle await extradition, the BPP has been having something of a 'Night of the Long Knives', with plenty to keep us laughing out loud as Klondike Kate McDermody stages a coup for leadership. First to go (apparently - see page 6) was Sid Williamson along with former Sid Williamson unconscious in an Oldham gutter - He claimed to have "brought a bit of respectability" to the BPP!

Brighton BNP organizer (and yet another drunken lush) Jill Jerome.

Next up was another founder member and on-off BPP leader Eddy Morrison, who was supposedly ousted for complaining about having his expenses claims turned down by McDermody, who is party treasurer. Morrison has used the BPP and his numerous other fascist parties as a personal (s)lush-fund for years, but the reason for his culling probably has more to do with complaints about McDermody's influence over Watmough, who is still supposedly BPP leader, and a piece which he attempted to publish in Nationalist Week taking the piss out of the pair of them. Morrison was clearly flapping following the Gilleard conviction, and then those of Sheppard and Whittle, but he claims he did not resign. According to Morrison, after sending his long-time pal, Watmough a complaint by e-mail, he received a note thanking him for his resignation! McDermody has gone on to publicly call Morrison "a coward, drunk, traitor, and parasite." And a lot more besides. Say what you like about these Nazis, they don't mind washing their grubby linen in public!

Shortly after Morrison was ousted, the BPP held an 'action' in London. Or rather they held one of the 'secret' little gatherings they confuse with 'activity'. Unfortunately for them, they got stopped by the cops on the way from their re-direction point to the meeting, and as a number of them were stupid enough to be carrying both weapons and drugs, they got nicked. As usual, 'Teflon Kev' was not arrested.

McDermody and the other idiots still in the BPP have since painted this routine encounter with the Plod as if they had really been in the trenches. Prior to the event, McDermody de-riding Morrison on the fascist internet forum 'Stormfront' had been bigging herself up as someone who could "walk the walk". When she returned from London, after her minor brush with the Plod she was shaking like a shitting dog. Posting on 'Stormfront' under one of Watmough's old user names ('Redwatch Admin') as she had been banned at the time, McDermody was close to hysteria!

Now McDermody thinks she has been 'blooded' she is busy organising an anti-Hip Hop demo in Leeds, the date of which was suddenly changed after local antifascists announced they would oppose it. While the event has now been timed to clash with the London Anarchist Bookfair, we still hope that the BPP will be confronted and left in no uncertain terms about how the people of Leeds feel about having scum like Watmough and McDermody on their streets. Be there - HMV, Lands Lane, Leeds city centre - Saturday October 18th, 11.00am.

More in depth articles on Martyn Gilleard and the BPP can be found in the archives section of the Antifa website.

IN THE SPIRIT OF CABLE STREET

Antifa opposing the BNP in Oxford last year

In the 1930's, the era of the Nazis, fascist movements sprang up across Europe and beyond. In Britain, Sir Oswald Mosley, previously a Labour MP, led the British Union of Fascists, the so-called 'Blackshirts'. Mosley styled himself on Adolf Hitler, and the BUF held Nazi-style rallies and marches where anyone who opposed them was ruthlessly beaten. Just as with the British National Party the BUF were protected by the State (and defended by clueless liberals) under the guise of supposed "free speech." In 1936, amid increasing fascist attacks on their opponents, and growing fascist influence across Europe, Mosley declared that he and his Blackshirts would march through the heart of the Jewish East End. As one, the East End community came out to oppose the fascists and the police who protected them. After fierce street-fighting the antifascists smashed the march and routed Mosley and his Blackshirts. It was a decisive victory in the struggle against fascism. For the most part, today's fascists wear suits and ties rather than black shirts, standing under the banner of the BNP. They remain just as much of a threat though, and must be opposed just as Mosley's fascists were opposed. Today ANTIFA stands in the spirit of Cable St, opposing fascism whenever, however, and wherever it appears, and by any means necessary.

ANTIFA ENGLAND

Antifa is a national federation comprised of local groups of militant antifascists, affiliated to the international Antifa movement.

We exist to confront fascist ideas, activities and organisations wherever and however they occur.

We utilise a wide range of tactics and believe it is important to confront fascism physically as well as ideologically.

We do not advocate the electoral process as the means of defeating fascism nor will we work with groups that do.

Our structure is anti-authoritarian and non hierarchical. We oppose discrimination based on race, gender, sexuality, ability or age.

We will not work with, accept information from, nor pass information to the magazine Searchlight.

Why 'No Pasaran!'

'No Pasaran!' was the battle cry of Spanish and Catalan antifascists, who rose up to defend their revolution against General Franco's fascist 'Falange'. While the antifascists were eventually defeated in the Spanish Civil War, 'No Pasaran!' (roughly translated as 'They shall not pass!') has remained as a rallying cry for militant antifascists internationally. It is also a message to fascists, that while they may have won that particular battle, 70 years later, we are still here to oppose and confront them, and always will be. No Pasaran!

From time to time we'll be issuing supplements to No Pasaran! Such as our recent supplement on the clowns of the so-called 'Racial Volunteer Force'. Like No Pasaran! These can be viewed or downloaded as a ready-to-print PDF from the Antifa website.

BPP - THE BRITISH PAEDOPHILE PARTY

In June, Martyn Gilleard, erstwhile Goole organizer for the so-called 'British Peoples Party', was jailed for the possession of homemade nail-bombs and plans to blow up mosques. Gilleard also pleaded guilty to possessing nearly forty thousand images of children and babies being sexually abused and tortured.

Gilleard with Eddy Morrison

While the BPP were initially more than happy to have a would-be terrorist (and potential martyr) on their hands, reality bit home with Gilleard's conviction. Despite (supposed) party leader Kevin Watmough repeatedly inciting idiots like Gilleard on his various pseudo-terrorist websites, and girlfriend Kate McDermody spouting off about "Racial Holy War", the BPP publicly made a cowardly U-turn following Gilleard's conviction, stating: "The BPP is a legally registered, law abiding party and our path to power is through legal demonstrations, meetings, magazines, printed propaganda and elections." Now that sort of talk won't sell many swastika badges will it Kev?

It was however the publicity surrounding Gilleard's paedophile conviction that really had the BPP worried, with them claiming that they had not known about these charges. Yet Gilleard's house had been raided in relation to his paedophile activities, not his neo-Nazi ones, and he was not the only person arrested. From the very moment of his arrest, it was obvious to anyone who took any interest in the case that there was a paedophile connection, indeed the story was outed on 'Indymedia'. It is simply inconceivable that Kevin Watmough and Kate McDermody, who had "supported him emotionally and financially for six months" did not know Gilleard was a paedophile. After they denied as much, other neo-Nazis came forward to contest the claim. The 'Racial Volunteer Force', with whom the BPP are currently pals, claimed they had rejected him sometime before (though there is some evidence to the contrary), while 'Ulster C18' told the BPP they should "hang their heads in shame" for protecting Gilleard. In a damage limitation exercise, Watmough added Gilleard to the 'Noncwatch' section of his 'Redwatch' site. Quoting himself in third person, Watmough cravenly (and dishonestly) stated: "Gilleard was indeed a member of the party but as the BPP are an organisation anyone can join by filling in an application form and sending it to the party address, with the required subscription fee enclosed, they have no way of screening applicants." But Gilleard was the BPP's Goole Organizer, someone the party leadership knew personally and had sworn to stand by whether he was convicted or not. At the time of Gilleard's arrest, they had called him "a trusted comrade and loyal member", he was not someone who had simply filled in a coupon.

The simple fact is that nonces and neo-Nazis go together like beer and pint glasses, the whole of the far Right is riven with this kind of scum. John Wood, founder member of the BPP and their first leader was a well-known sexual predator, Watmough has been accused of rape on several occasions, and Sid Williamson, another founder member and until recently, National Organiser, has been accused of both rape and paedophile activities.

The BPP are currently supporting another paedophile, Simon Sheppard. In his autobiography, Sheppard boasts, among other things, about an abusive relationship with a 13 year-old girl. Together, with fellow anti-Semite Steve Whittle, Sheppard is currently locked up in California after fleeing there following his conviction on race-hate charges at Leeds crown court. The convictions were significant because they appear to close a loophole by which British fascists have been free to openly flout the British race laws because their websites are hosted abroad.

RWB SUPPLIER TARGETED BY ANTIFASCISTS

Shortly before the British National Party's 'RWB' scumfest, militant antifascists in Derbyshire targeted the company providing chemical toilets for the event. The company, STS, had the gates to their depot at Pottery Lane, Chesterfield, locked and glued, and the slogan 'BNP = Shite' painted on them.

Claiming responsibility for the action on Indymedia, the antifascists said: "Campaigns against all supporters of the BNP event will continue. We will stop the fascists!"

They warned: "All companies who support the RWB can expect to be targeted also. If you make money by helping the BNP, we will cost you money!"

ARE SID AND KLONDIKE KATE IN FACT THE SAME PERSON?!

beer-guts, the same piggy eyes, the same cocktail sausage fingers, and both reputedly shave twice a day. Could it be that it is Sid Williamson who has in fact seized control of the BPP, rather than McDermody, who like Williamson, appears to have come from nowhere? Would boyfriend Kev Watmough be clueless enough not to notice? The answer to that question, at least, we think is obvious.

The BPP may have apparently got rid of their pet buffoon Sid Williamson (see page 7), but we wonder if anyone has ever seen The Saltdean Sofa Soaker and Klondike Kate McDermody together at the same time. Sid is after all a reputed 'master of disguise', we've seen him with gelled up hair and a goatee, and there was of course his famous impression of a certain Little Britain character (see last issue of No Pasaran!) 'Sid' and McDermody have the same number of chins, the same sagging man-breasts, the same

BLUB & DISHONOUR

If 'Blood & Honour' are so bloody honourable, how come they don't advertise their gigs openly in the way that Antifa do? Instead the cowardly Nazis hide behind false names, mobile numbers, and re-direction points. The gigs are usually held in the worst shitholes imaginable, with the Fash hiding in dingy back rooms to listen to the dire wailings of untalented morons unable to get a normal gig. What a sad and pathetic spectacle. Still, one Leeds antifascist managed to get some sport outside Leeds Railwayman's Club on Wellington Road when 'Blub & Dishonour' were in town for the night. Tracking the Filth to their temporary lair, and spotting a couple of Nazis stupid enough to have strayed from it, our bold comrade set about the pair of them!

Spotted at the same gig was the lead singer of West Yorkshire Oi! band 'Scum'. Many years ago, Ross was given a slap by Huddersfield AFA and made to burn all his Nazi gear. Since then, along with his cowardly mates, he's gutlessly claimed to be "apolitical". Unfortunately for Ross, the mugs at B&H have given the game away by posting up his pic on their own site. Ross has been in hiding since the news broke. Watch this space for what happens next!

Not that Ross is the only closet Nazi in 'Scum', nor the only one to come unstuck. We hope the rumours that you've thrown in the towel are true lads, and we really do advise you to 'stay down'.

The BNP's 'RWB' - Fascists Hide Behind Cops YET AGAIN!

The Filth & The Fury - Militant antifascists move in to de-arrest a captured comrade

The British National Party's annual 'Red, White & Blue' scumfest has seen very little opposition in the past. However, this year, the threat of militant antifascist opposition caused the BNP to be denied a music and drinks license for the event, and it only took place at all because of a huge police presence reminiscent of the National Front's heyday in the 1970's.

The scene for the 2008 'RWB', as with the 2007 event, was the farm of BNP member and former Tory councillor Alan Warner - The Bungalow, Codnor Denby Lane, Denby Village, Derbyshire, DE5 8PT (01773 748129 and 07810 383595 alan.warner@w3z.co.uk) Also, as previously, it was organised by David Shapcott, who lives far enough away at 6 The Spinney, Burnley, Lancashire, BB12 OPB (07871 029681) to be well out of earshot of the Nazi drinking songs and the drunken boorish antics, which, along with hardline fascist politics, are a stock feature of the RWB.

Local residents are not so lucky as Shapcott, and after last year's event, when they were forced to put up with neo-Nazi thugs sieg-heiling their way around the village, screaming and shouting all night, and urinating in their gardens - even for weeks after the RWB was officially over - many locals vehemently opposed a repeat event. Unfortunately, their voices carried little clout with their BNP neighbour.

Antifa had been planning to oppose the RWB since last year, announcing our mobilisation in April, the first national antifascist organisation to do so. The threat of militant opposition, together with local protest, was the chief factor in the BNP having their music and drinks license for the event rejected.

Local protest to the RWB was co-ordinated under the umbrella of the nominally independent 'Notts Stop The BNP' group. Unfortunately, as the RWB loomed the usual suspects sold out any promise of taking a militant stance, irrespective of the agreements democratically made by the group's membership.

Nationally, 'Unite Against Fascism', a front-group for the SWP, ignored the RWB, even in the face of calls for a mobilisation from some of their grassroots members, not least those within Notts Stop The BNP. Faced with Antifa's call for a militant mobilisation and the growing likelihood of a well-attended demonstration which was out of their control however, the UAF leadership eventually moved to take charge of any liberal anti-racist opposition by calling for a demo 2 hours later than the one promoted by Notts Stop The BNP and the local residents.

While the two groups of Trots and liberals (and the undoubtedly well-meaning antifascists still suckered by the likes of the UAF) squabbled over the details of their tame protest/paper-selling opportunity, the cops and the BNP must have been laughing their socks off. Neither entity was laughing at the prospect of militant opposition to the RWB though. While the liberals cow-towed to the cops every request, which eventually resulted in a heavily restricted and ineffectual protest well out of ear-shot of the RWB, Antifa (of course) did not even bother to return the increasingly frantic calls from Derbyshire Police.

Soon after the BNP had their music and alcohol license rejected, scumbag Warner woke up to find his front gates chained and padlocked, and the entrance to his farm daubed with anti-BNP graffiti. This wasn't the first visit to the farm by antifascists, on one occasion they had even ripped the England flag from the flag-pole in his front garden. Nor would it be the last visit, he was eventually reduced to begging the police for a 'panic button'.

For the moment at least, Warner had little need to worry. Derbyshire police mobilised a huge police presence to protect the fascist scumfest, with numbers and expenditure unprecedented since the days when their forbears protected the equally cowardly National Front.

On Saturday 16th August, while the UAF/SWP sold papers to the antifascists they'd assisted the cops in penning-in, and while the UAF's Weyman Bennett arrogantly pushed aside local anti-racists to hand pick the pitifully small contingent being allowed to march past the RWB site, militant antifascists went into the field. Barricades were built across roads leading to the RWB site, and despite brutal opposition from riot cops protecting the BNP, militant antifascists tried again and again to break through their lines to engage the fascists.

Alan Warner - Not so cocky when you were sat clutching your panic button were you Alan?

The BNP may now be trying to pretend that it was 'business as usual' at the RWB, and that they sat behind police lines feeling safe and secure, but that is far from the truth. The cops got so sick of hearing BNP 'security' chief Martin Reynold's quavering voice, that they told him to stop calling them, and attendance at the RWB was undoubtedly down with only 75 cars in the site car-park. The massive publicity caused by the militant antifascist mobilisation has led to widespread calls for an end to the RWB, at least at the same site.

Despite this year's events, and despite an increase in local opposition, Alan Warner is vehement that the event will go ahead on his land again next year. Whatever happens in the future, whether this fascist gathering is forced to move or not, the BNP can be sure that Antifa will be there to oppose them. And Warner, if you're reading this, we suggest you keep on clutching your panic button.
