What is the Portland Revolutionary Assembly::

The PRA is an assembly of Portland community groups and collectives, which started in Spring 07 and meets quarterly, to create better cohesion, collaboration, and solidarity between anti-capitalist and anti-authoritarian groups in the Portland area. Currently the assembly is around 25 groups with varying participation, and we are open to new collectives and groups joining. contact: pdx-mutualaid@riseup.net

Disclaimer:: This is published by a working group started out of the Spring 08 PRA to work on creating a radical publication for events, writings, poetry, and art. Early on, we realized the idea of trying to reach consensus about everything printed in here would be tedious, which is why we have this disclaimer: The words and art expressed in this paper do not necessary represent all the collectives in the Assembly but was created out of collectives in assembly.

Submissions:: deadline 23rd of month pdx-mutualaid@riseup.net

Notes from the editors:: please feel free to add your own illustrations as they are much needed. Looking for submissions on local stories, design, and distros.

---Proactive community meetings, Wednesdays at 6pm

10 September begins the first of an urgent series of public forums, discussions, information sessions and action planning to take back our neighbourhoods. Last week, the infamous PPI rent-a-cops came into the Central Eastside Industrial district to conduct a mass sweep-up of homeless "trespass campers". The week before, black helicopters and Homeland Security vehicles were seen throughout inner Southeast neighbourhoods, as part of an 'urban training exercises'. Who are the people behind these secret contracts, who say they speak on behalf of our business community and through our elected officials? Why have we not been informed or included in the process?

Sept 16, 7-9 pm - Pear Growers and Free Absolutes. What do the very earliest anarchists, like Pierre-Joseph Proudhon and Anselme Bellegarrigue, have to say to us about organizing and networking in the present? For that matter, what can we learn from "utopian" socialists, such as Charles Fourier? A few important things, perhaps. Come and weigh in issue like competition, cooperation, sectarianism, coalition-building, etc.

* Sept 23, 6-7 pm - Another pamphlet-release night. Learn why the Revolution is like a steeple-chase event, according to Proudhon's "Toast to the Revolution" (in a brand-new translation.) Get introduced Joshua King Ingalls, one of the largely-forgotten major figures of the American individualist anarchist school. Hear about what anarchists are doing to translate previously untranslated radical material.

* Sept 30, 7-9 pm - Individualism and Socialism: the debate at its beginning. If the forces that watch over zine production smile, I'll be premiering a new project, Left-Liberty, but, smiles or no smiles, we'll be talking about the emergence of the terms "individualism" and "socialism," in the context of Pierre Leroux's first-ever comparison of the two terms in 1834, another recently-translated article. Those terms have had roller-coaster careers, and their twists and turns have influenced the ways we think about politics, about potential allies and antagonists. We'll dig into the history a bit, searching for lessons useful in the present.

A New Movement

Through out history one of anarchism's greatest challenges has been to build a cohesive and effective movement. Many anarchist movements that once numbered tens of thousands, all but died off because of a lack of organization.

The Russian revolution is probably the greatest example of this; In the early 1900's the anarchists rivaled the Bolsheviks in numbers but were unsuccessful at generating a real movement due to "Marx Syndrome". Marxist dominance over the first international and over the socialist movement as a whole pushed many anarchists to the other side of the organizational spectrum causing them to reject all forms of formal organization. This is what was called "Marx Syndrome". After the first revolution of 1905, anarchist groups sprung up like wild flowers but experienced the same problems that anarchist groups still face today: poor coordination between groups and an excess amount of "Illegalists"[1] within the movement. This of course makes for an ineffective movement. Many of the anarchists that wished to organize ended up working with the Bolsheviks, only to be weeded out of the Soviet Union later.

The United States Pacific Northwest region has posed another organizational challenge. Post leftist ideology runs rampant and the popular anarchism in the PNW seems to regard formal organization as being synonymous with government, party, and hierarchy. There is but only a ghost of Class Struggle Anarchist organizations functioning in Pacific Northwest. There are a few isolated collectives in the larger cities, but the PNW is seriously lacking an effective anarchist organization.

A few years ago, the Northwest Anarchist Federation (NAF) was founded on the anarchist specific tradition, but due to infighting and differences in tactics the organization collapsed. However, during their relatively short life they created hope.

A new group, Class Action Alliance (CAA), was founded on June 7, 2008 in Olympia, Washington. The group was founded on the specific tradition and allies themselves with the Anakismo publishing group. The following are the four main tenets of their anarchist organization:

- * Theoretical Unity
- * Tactical Unity
- * Collective Action and Discipline
- * Federalism

Class struggle anarchists now have a medium with which to organize! But not recruit; specific organizations are not mass organizations. They aren't trying to recruit everyone into their organization. A specific organization aims at having a group of dedicated politically aligned activists working in mass struggles to put forth an anarchist influence.

If Class Action Alliance is as successful as other Anarkismo allied groups, in the next decade there will be an increasing amount and a different kind of anarchist activity. CAA is aiming to be focused in local struggles such as gentrification of urban areas and the rising cost of public transit. The days of summit hopping are over. It's time to build real connections with the people through direct action, direct democracy and solidarity and help them change the things that hurt them the most!

Arrested Street Medic Speaks

Press Release by R. Westlund

Portland Street Medics Victims of Police Brutality and Unjustified Arrests at RNC

Four members of the Portland Street Medic Collective who had travelled to the RNC to provide medical care to the radical community were arrested on 9-1-2008. All are now released pending court dates in October.

Before the arrest, the medics were following an unpermitted march around the outskirts of the boundaries of the Excel Center. The march stayed mostly to sidewalks and utilized several pedestrian trails.

After heading nearly a mile down a bike trail with a river on one side and an unpassable bank on the other side of the road, protesters found themselves under fire from police chemical weapons, having never received an order to disperse. The protestors and the medics fled back up the bike path while the onslaught of chemical weapons and differently-lethal weapons continued behind and next to the fleeing crowd. Police in riot gear ran past the tail end of the running group, continuing to launch weapons into the crowd, forcing those at the back to run through the already dispensed weapons.

The four medics helped with the evacuation of at least five patients, including one with a broken hand from being hit with police weaponry, one with an injured ankle from being hit with police weaponry who needed physical support to walk, and one who was blinded by pepper spray. This assistance left the medics at the very back of the crowd and among the worst victims of chemical weapons as they fled the scene.

At the corner of Ontario and Shepard the crowd was trapped in a park by lines of riot police and all people in the park, including those holding tickets to a concert and attempting to utilize the pedestrian bridges to get to the concert, were arrested. Those with misdemeanors were released later that night, while those being held on felonies were in jail for 48 hours.

Three of the Portland Medics, David Drew, Jr, Tracy Maier, and R. Westlund are charged with Misdemeanors in the 1st degree of "presence at an unlawful assembly and refusing to leave." They face 90 days in jail and fines up to $1,000. The fourth, A. Oliver Hayes, is charged with a Gross Misdemeanor in the 3rd degree of rioting, and faces one year in jail and a fine of $1,000.

Later in the week, a group of six medics, three of them from Portland, were again the targets of police misconduct. A group of 350 people were being detained and preparing to be arrested on a bridge. The group included some legal observers from the NLG and 12 Street Medics. Medic Dispatch received news that the legal observers in the group had been released prior to the arrest, so the six medics headed out to see if they could negotiate with the police for the release of the medics.

On the first phone call, the medic explained the job of the medics and explained that they were asking for the release of the medics detained on the bridge. The medic gave WC their full legal name and offered to provide proof of credentials as an EMT. WC offered to give the request to the commander at the scene and then call the medics back.

After a reasonable amount of time, the medic called WC back to check on the status. WC questioned the location of the medics, and the medic confirmed that they were at the scene of the arrest before ending the phone call to wait for further news.

The medic attempted to speak with two officers on scene, but neither would produce a supervisor to do the negotiations. Moments after the second attempt, while the Medic Liaison was making another call to WC, one of the Portland Medics was pulled out of the crowd of observers and drug into the street by four police officers. The medic's pockets were searched while the medic stated, "I do not consent to this search." While still searching this medic, the commanding officer led four more officers into the crowd and pulled out the Medic Liaison, who had been on the phone moments before. The first medic was released back into the crowd after their pockets were searched.

The second medic was questioned as to why they were carrying a backpack and hip pack. The medic explained their status as an EMT and allowed officers to take their registration card as proof. Officers explained, "You reached your hands in your pockets, and that makes us nervous, so now we have to check what you're up to." The medic repeatedly denied consent for the search but officers began opening the medic kits regardless. An officer asked, "Where did you get all this stuff? Did you steal it off the ambulance?" The medic responded, "I'm not going to answer any more of your questions until I speak to my lawyer." The officer replied, "In that case, you can pick your own shit up off the ground," and began opening ziplock bags and dumping medical supplies on the ground.

During the search, officers repeatedly made threats about possible criminal charges against the medic, including "medical terrorism." Officers dumped the entire contents of both medical kits on the ground, purposefully stepped on the equipment, read all the aftercare flyers and made threats about "testing the pepper spray" on this medic, and searched the medic's body and clothing three separate times in an extremely rough and inappropriate manner. After running the medic's ID through the system, the officers ordered the medic to clean up all the supplies, and accused the medic of littering when a small packet of vitamins was overlooked on the ground. Once the supplies were repacked, the medic was free to go.

These police actions were not based on any reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing. The police were targeting the medics who were attempting to liaise with commanding officers and harassing them in order to reduce their power and prevent further negotiating tactics.

*In the 2008 election cycle, two initiatives (IP #19 and IP #112)

will specifically target immigrant and refugee communities by cutting ESL funding, limiting access to civic participation, and allowing state/local cooperation and resources for immigration enforcement. If passed, these measures will heighten the atmosphere of fear and division for many Portland communities. For more information, please visit:

*Wendy Binion, who works with Portland Indymedia, was snatched from Mears Park in St. Paul during the rally prior to the March for Our Lives on September 2nd, 2008. She was surrounded by riot cops in the street and was taken away to a special facility for processing. Her detainment is part of a definite pattern by authorities during the RNC to disrupt and intimidate independent media journalists who were covering the demonstrators’ perspective from the streets of St. Paul.

*This week(2 Sept), word comes that the city of Portland will finally settle a lawsuit with Jahar Perez’s family. They will hand the Perez family a check for $350,000, and business will go back to usual. I’m shocked by this “award.” Although it is clearly an admission of guilt, it is way too little, way too late. The PPB should have changed its policies long ago, to prevent this kind of senseless killing. They should have disciplined Sery and Macomber severely. Both should have been stripped of their badges, and both should be serving lengthy prison sentences for the violent homicide which they committed. They should never be allowed to carry guns again. But none of this has happened. I’m shocked that anyone could conclude that $350,000 is a fair price to pay for the taking of a life -- especially the predictable, repeated, savage taking of the life of yet another Black man on the streets of Portland. - IMCista reporting
